

The Evolving Biography of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ: A Study in Textual Fluidity and Transformation

Shiraz Hajiani

hajiani@uchicago.edu

KEYWORDS

Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ; Nāṣir-i Khusraw; Nizari Ismailis; daʿwa literature; historiography; heresiography; Sarguzasht (biography)

The Sarguzasht-i Sayyidnā (biography of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ), presents a compelling case study of the malleability of historical narratives and demonstrates how biographical constructions have served as contested sites of memory, ideology, and textual authority in Islamicate historiography.¹ Episodes of biographical information about Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ (r. 1090-1124)—the founder of Nizari Ismailism and the first ruler of the Nizari polity in Iran (fl. 1090-1256)—are found in non-Ismaili writing consisting of taʾrīkh (historiography), fīraq (heresiography), and radd (refutation) literature and in Nizari daʿwa (summons) literature. His biography has been shaped by contextual discourses, and has continued to be reformulated and repurposed over the past eight centuries.

Based, in part, on the writings of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ, the Sarguzasht was preserved at Alamūt until its library was destroyed by the Mongols in 1256. ‘Aṭā Malik Juwaynī’s (d. 1283) selective preservation and destruction of texts from this library, demonstrates how knowledge preservation is an act of editorial judgment; this destruction and multitudes of other book-burnings exemplify the vulnerability of material and manuscript culture to political violence.² Knowledge preservation has a political dimension and dynamics of how the

¹ This chapter synthesises portions of my doctoral research and research for my forthcoming books: Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ and the Emergence of Nizari Ismailism and Concealment and Manifestation: Early Nizari Ismaili treatises on Eschatology and Soteriology. A substantial part of further research was done while I was the Alwaleed Postdoctoral Fellow in Islamic Studies at Harvard University and Postdoctoral Fellow in the Transcendence and Transformation Initiative of the Center for the Study of World Religions. I am grateful to Dr. Wafi Momin and the organising team for the invitation to participate in the Rethinking Texts and their Contexts in Muslim Societies Conference at the Institute of Ismaili Studies in October 2023. Special thanks also to all conference colleagues for their thought-provoking papers and invaluable feedback.

² ‘Alā’ al-Dīn ‘Aṭā Malik Juwaynī, Mīrẓā Muḥammad b. ‘Abdu’l-Wahhāb-i Qazwīnī, ed. Taʾrīkh-i jahān-gushā Vol. 3: Mangū Qāʾān, Hūlāgū and the Ismāʿīlīs. (London: Luzac & Co (HII-etext), 1958 (original edition 1912-1937)). 86-87 and 270 tr.: ‘Alā’ al-Dīn ‘Aṭā Malik Juwaynī, The History of the World-Conqueror. trans. John Andrew Boyle (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1958). 666 and 719. The only extant text from the library of Alamūt is the Dustūr al-munajjimīn preserved in the Bibliothèque nationale de France, Paris as BnF Arabe 5968. Cf. also: Eva “powerful” shape collective memory through selective transmission. Processes of textual transmission reveal the fragility of sources and the fluid nature of historical narrative.

Following Juwaynī, Rashīd al-Dīn Faḍl Allāh (d. 1318), and Abū’l-Qāsim Qāshānī (d. after 1337) moulded the plundered Nizari da‘wa literature into their dynastic chronicles.³ The fragmentary survival of Nizari texts in hostile chronicles illustrates the persistence of Ismaili voices within non-Ismaili frameworks and necessitating a double narrative analyses.⁴ Arabic historiography produced at distances of time and space has also been important in shaping the image of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ. Many modern scholars have rejected the Sarguzasht as an unreliable source since it is hagiographic and fictive in parts; however, these Arabo-centric perspectives readily ignore the many non-factual, fictional and creedally antagonistic reports and implications of the internal inconsistencies in Arabic historiography.⁵

I. Portraits of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ

Portrayals of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ have followed two opposite trajectories: Sunni and Ithnā‘sharī authors have construed him as a scheming arch-heretic and deceiver, while Nizari writings depicted him as a sanctified forebear and eschatological figure. Both intertwine legend and history so much so that his biography is more the product of the biographers’ imagination than veritable past actualities. I examine the diverse trajectories of the image of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ in four layers:

- in Sunni ta‘rikh (historiographic) and firaq (heresiographic) texts before 1256
- in Ilkhanid era chronicles which used Nizari da‘wa literature acquired from Alamut
- in derivative historiography after the destruction of the Nizari polity
- in a selection of Nizari da‘wa literature

In these analyses we will explore the cumulative impacts of knowledge production, Orthmann, and Petra G. Schmidl, eds. Science in the City of Fortune: The Dustūr al-munajjimīn and its World (Berlin: EB-Verlag, 2017).

³ Juwaynī, Jahān-gushā v3. 86-87 and 270 tr.: Juwaynī, HWC.; Rashīd al-Dīn Faḍl Allāh, Muḥammad Taqī Dānīshpazhūh, and Muḥammad Mudarrisī Zanjānī, eds. Jāmi‘ al-tawārikh: qismat-i Ismā‘īliyān wa Fāṭimīyān wa Nizāriyān wa Dā‘īyān wa Rafiqān. (Tehran: Bungāh-i Tarjama wa Nashr-i Kitāb (HII-etext), 1960).; Jamāl al-Dīn ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Alī Qāshānī, Muḥammad Taqī Dānīshpazhūh, ed. Zubdat al-tawārikh: bakhsh-i Fāṭimīyān wa Nazāriyān. (Tehran: Mu‘assasah-yi Muṭāla‘āt wa Taḥqīqāt-i Farhangī, 1987).

⁴ Shiraz Hajiani, “Reconstructing Alamut: New Approaches to the Study of the Qiyāma and the Nizari Polity in Iran,” diss., University of Chicago, (2019). 14, 40 and 292ff dissemination and consumption, and probe the fragility and fluid notions of the “text”.

⁵ Cf. Shiraz Hajiani, Concealment and Manifestation: Early Nizari Ismaili Treatises on Eschatology and Soteriology. (London: Institute of Ismaili Studies and Bloomsbury Publishing, Forthcoming). Treatise III

II. Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ in Pre-Ilkhanid Era Writing

Before the Mongol decapitation of the Nizari polity, writing about Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ was misinformed, misinforming and antagonistic to the Ismailis. Here is a brief outline of a century and a half of such writing in different genres: Abū Ḥāmid Muḥammad al-Ghazālī (d. 1111) wrote six treatises attacking the Ismailis particularly repudiating their doctrine of taʿlīm (authoritative teaching of the imam).⁶ Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Karīm Shahrastānī (d. 1153) preserved the Four Propositions of taʿlīm (Chahār faṣl, al-Fuṣūl al-arbaʿa), one of the most significant extant texts attributed to Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ. In his heresiographic taxonomy, Shahrastānī characterised Ḥasan’s insistence on taʿlīm incorrectly as an abandonment of taʾwīl (allegorical interpretation), cyclical history and Neoplatonic themes which had become hallmarks of Ismaili thought. He called Ḥasan’s teaching the “new summons” (al-Daʿwat al-jadīda)—a neologism which has persisted into modern scholarship.⁷ Ibn al-Jawzī (d. 1201), the Baghdadī Hanbali scholar construed Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ as a dangerous, manipulative, and subversive figure—an archetype of the heretical rebel leader. He recounted Ḥasan’s demonstration of power by commanding two fidāʾīs (devotees, operatives) to commit suicide—one cut his own throat, another jumped off a parapet. These types of anecdotes became part of the repertoire of stories about Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ reflecting the fears of the Nizari daʿwa and the military threat of their polity—particularly of their asymmetric warfare.⁸

Aḥmad b. Yūsuf b. al-Azraq al-Fāriqī (d. after. 1176) in his regional history, the Taʾrīkh Mayyāfāriqīn wa Āmid (History of Mayyāfāriqīn and Āmid) provides a different image. He wrote that Ḥasan both gave his daughter in marriage to Nizār—whose descendants lived and died in

⁶ The key texts are: Abū Ḥāmid Muḥammad al-Ghazālī, “Faḍāʾih al-Bāṭiniyya wa faḍāʾil al-Mustaẓhiriyya (The Infamies of the Bāṭinis and the Virtues of the Mustaẓhiris),” in Freedom and fulfillment: an annotated translation of al-Munqidh min al-ḍalāl and other relevant works of al-Ghazālī by Richard McCarthy (Boston: Twayne Publishers, 1980).; Abū Ḥāmid Muḥammad al-Ghazālī, “al-Munqidh min al-ḍalāl (The Rescuer from Error),” in Medieval Islamic Philosophical Writings (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2005).; Abū Ḥāmid Muḥammad al-Ghazālī, Maḥmūd Bijou, ed. Al-Qiṣṣa al-mustaqīm (The Just Balance). (Damascus: Al-maṭbaʿa al-ʿilmiyya, 1994).

⁷ Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Karīm Shahrastānī, Muḥammad b. Faṭḥ Allāh Badrān (original edition 1955), ed. Kitāb al-milal waʾl-niḥal. (Qumm: Al-Sharīf al-Raẓī (etext), 1985). 225-235; Tr: Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Karīm Shahrastānī, Muslim Sects and Divisions: the Section on Muslim Sects in Kitāb al-milal waʾl-niḥal. trans. A.K. Kazi and J.G. Flynn (London; Boston: Kegan Paul International, 1984). 163-170; Marshall G. S. Hodgson, The Order of Assassins: The Struggle of the Early Nizārī Ismāʿīlīs Against the Islamic World. (s-Gravenhage: Mouton, 1955). 325-328

⁸ Abūʾl-Faraj Ibn al-Jawzī, and D. S. Margoliouth, “The Devil’s Delusion of Ibn al-Jawzī, a Translation of his ‘Talbis iblis,’” Islamic Culture 4 (1935). 556.

Egypt—and gave Nizār sanctuary at Alamūt, thereby transferring the imamate to Iran. Carole Hillenbrand has noted that al-Fāriqī's work is disordered; nevertheless, his text is perhaps the earliest non-Ismaili source to discuss the transference of the Nizari imamate to Iran, suggesting that by the 1160s–1170s diverse and competing narratives of Ḥasan's role in that transference were already in circulation—he may have received and recorded the contradictory information from Nizari interlocutors.⁹

ʿIzz al-Dīn Ibn al-Athīr's (d. 1233) al-Kāmil fī'l-tārīkh (The Complete History) repeats several narratives about the Ismailis from Ibn al-Jawzī.¹⁰ Following Shahrastānī, Ibn al-Athīr reported that in an audience with the Fatimid imam-caliph al-Mustaʿīz, Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ asked, "Who is the imam after you?" and the imam indicated his son Nizār. When he returned to Iran he took Alamūt by evicting its ruler. "Hearing this news, Nizam al-Mulk sent an army to the castle of Alamut. They besieged it and blockaded the roads to it. Ibn al-Sabbah suffered from the siege, so sent men to assassinate Nizam al-Mulk. After he was killed the army withdrew from Alamut."¹¹

A century after his death, the hostile and fanciful images of Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ proliferated in non-Nizari writing. Adding to the caricatures of Ismailis in early refutations, Shahrastānī's account and Ibn al-Jawzī and Ibn al-Athīr's depictions of Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ became the bases for later, especially Arabic sources such as Ibn Muyassar (d. 1278) and al-Maqrīzī (d. 1442) and were adopted by modern scholarship which continues to privilege Arabic sources.

III. Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ in the Ilkhanid Era Chronicles

1. Digital Analyses

Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ is depicted very differently in the chronicles of Juwaynī (1260, siglum J-TJG), Rashīd al-Dīn (1314, siglum R-JT), and Qāshānī (1317, siglum Q-ZT) because they drew from

⁹ al-Fāriqī, Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf ibn al-Azraq, ʿAbd al-Laṭīf Badawī, ed. Tārīkh al-Fāriqī. (Cairo: al-Maṭābiʿ al-Amīriyah, 1959). 267-269; Carole Hillenbrand, A Muslim Principality in Crusader Times: The Early Artuqid State. (Istanbul: Nederlands Historisch-Archaeologisch Institute Istanbul, 1990). 6, 12

¹⁰ ʿIzz al-Dīn Ibn al-Athīr, Carl Johan Tornberg, ed. Al-kāmil fī'l-taʾrīkh. (Beirut: Dār al-Šādir (HII-etext), 1965 (original edition 1851-1876)). X:312-325 Tr: ʿIzz al-Dīn Ibn al-Athīr, The Chronicle of Ibn al-Athīr for the Crusading Period from al-Kāmil fī'l-taʾrīkh. trans. D. S. Richards (Aldershot, UK; Burlington, VT: Ashgate, 2006). I:39-48

¹¹ Ibn al-Athīr, Al-Kāmil. X:317 Tr: Ibn al-Athīr, al-Kāmil-Crusading Period. I:42. cf. Juwaynī, Jahān-gushā v3. 190; Juwaynī, HWC. 668; R-JT 101; Q-ZT 137. The army withdrew after Malikshāh's death not on the killing of Nizām al-Mulk. cf. Shiraz Hajiani, Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ and the Emergence of Nizari Ismailism. (Edinburgh: Edinburgh U. P., forthcoming). ch. 3; Idem. "Nizām Al-Mulk." In Encyclopaedia of the Ismailis, edited by Farhad Daftary, forthcoming.

Nizari da'wa literature plundered from Alamūt for their dynastic histories. Each history is divided into eight regnal accounts. To analyse these accounts down to the lexical level, I adapted the TAMS Analyzer software designed by Matthew Weinstein for ethnographic and discourse research, as a coding and segmentation tool.¹² Breaking each narrative into content and sentiment categorised segments, and combining this with account lengths, word-frequencies, and term correlations, revealed the distinct frameworks and focalisations operative in each text. Some of the data is presented here.¹³

The R-JT (24850 words) account of the entire Nizari polity is 1.35 times longer than J-TJG (15965 words); Q-ZT (28983 words) is similarly 1.45 times longer than J-TJG and 15% longer than R-JT. Juwayni referred only to the Sarguzasht-i Sayyidnā as a source; Rashid al-Din and Qashani indicated four different Nizari sources—none of which are known to be extant. Rashid al-Din and Qashani, at the beginning and end of their regnal account of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ indicated their use of the Sarguzasht.¹⁴

The three chroniclers devote disproportionate attention to Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ's reign: though his thirty-four years represent roughly 20% of the Nizari polity's 166-year span, they account for 27% of J-TJG, 41% of R-JT, and 37% of Q-ZT by word count. The table and chart below detail the length of each regnal account across all eight rulers, along with the sources each chronicler drew upon.

Table 1: Word Length vs. Reigns of Nizari Rulers and Sources

Ruler	J-TJG	R-JT	Q-ZT	Reign	Sources Used
Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ	4373	10272	10761	34	Sarguzasht-i Sayyidnā Starts: J-TJG 187; R-JT 97; Q-ZT 133 Ends: J-TJG n/a; R-JT 134; Q-ZT 168
Buzurg Ummīd	704	1911	2934	14	Kitāb-i Buzurg Ummīd Starts: Ends: J-TJG n/a; R-JT 144; Q-ZT 182
M. b. Buzurg Ummīd	202	3763	4327	24	Eyewitness Account of 'Abd al-Malik b. 'Ali Starts: J-TJG n/a; R-JT 144; Q-ZT 182 Tārīkh-i Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ (Ṣalāḥ Munshī) Ends: J-TJG n/a; R-JT 161; Q-ZT 198
Ḥasan 'alā dhikrihi'l-salām	3072	2117	2764	4	?

¹² Available at <https://tamsys.sourceforge.io>

¹³ Hajiani, "Reconstructing Alamut." 186-236. This section is drawn from my dissertation chapter entitled "Structure and Content of Ilkhanid Histories of Nizari Ismailism".

¹⁴ R-JT 97 and Q-ZT 133; 23 R-JT 134 and Q-ZT 168

Nur al-Din Muḥammad	279	1082	1918	44	R-JT 173: “Whatever this feeble one learnt from accounts, reports and history of predecessors is [that which has been mentioned]”
Jalāl al-Dīn Ḥasan	1508	1247	1074	11	?
‘Alā’ al-Dīn Muḥammad	2371	1731	1826	35	?
Rukn al-Dīn Khūrshāh	3456	2727	3379	2	?
Totals	15965	24850	28983	167

J-TJG = Ta’rikh-i jahān-gushā; R-JT = Jāmi’ al-tawārikh; Q-ZT = Zubdat al-tawārikh

Figure 1: Account Length (Words) vs. Reigns (Years) of Nizari Rulers

A. STRUCTURAL ANALYSES OF SOURCE TEXTS

The eight regnal accounts in the three chronicles total 69,798 words and over 7,000 unique terms. The conjunction و (wa, and) found 7890 times is of little useful analytical value. The datasets have therefore been filtered to eliminate non-substantive terms. The fifteen most frequently occurring substantive terms are tabulated below—they reveal authorial pre-commitments and focalisation at the lexical level.

Table 2: Most Frequently Occurring Substantive Terms in the Accounts of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ

	ALL 3		F	J-TJG		F	R-JT		F	Q-ZT		F
1	حسن	Ḥasan	302	حسن	Ḥasan	116	سلطان	sulṭān	122	محمد	Muḥammad	127
2	سلطان	sulṭān	294	پادشاه	pādishāh	57	محمد	Muḥammad	107	سلطان	sulṭān	120
3	الموت	Alamūt	250	الموت	Alamūt	56	قتل	qatala	98	علی	‘Alī/‘Alā	115
4	محمد	Muḥammad	238	رکن	Rukn	54	حسن	Ḥasan	89	سیدنا	Sayyidnā	115
5	قتل	qatala	227	سلطان	sulṭān	52	سیدنا	Sayyidnā	89	الموت	Alamūt	113
6	قلعه	qal‘a	208	قلعه	qal‘a	42	قلعه	qal‘a	87	قتل	qatala	110
7	سیدنا	Sayyidnā	204	دعوت	da‘wat	42	رفیقان	Rafiqān	82	رفیقان	Rafiqān	101
8	رفیقان	Rafiqān	184	علاء	‘Alā	40	الموت	Alamūt	81	حسن	Ḥasan	97
9	علی	‘Alī/‘alā	174	صباح	Ṣabbāḥ	39	پادشاه	pādishāh	60	قلعه	qal‘a	79
10	پادشاه	pādishāh	170	محمد	Muḥammad	37	کیا	Kiyā	60	کیا	Kiyā	79
11	دعوت	da‘wat	159	امام	imām	32	الله	Allāh	57	السلام	al-Salām	74
12	بزرگ	Buzurg	144	جلال	Jalāl	32	علی	‘Alī/‘Alā	56	قزوین	Qazwīn	70
13	کیا	Kiyā	141	بزرگ	Buzurg	30	بزرگ	Buzurg	56	دعوت	da‘wat	62
14	قزوین	Qazwīn	124	اسلام	Islām	26	دعوت	da‘wat	55	بزرگ	Buzurg	58
15	امام	imām	123	امید	Umīd	25	قزوین	Qazwīn	47	پادشاه	pādishāh	53

Columns: ALL 3 = all three chronicles combined; F = frequency of occurrences

The segment-sentiment analyses illustrate that the chroniclers focussed fifty percent of their accounts on warfare and religious discourses.¹⁵ The fifteen terms highlight five major categories: 1) Terms of Religious Discourse; 2) Terms of Territory and Place; 3) Terms and Names of People (Ismailis; Opponents of Nizaris; Either Group); 4) Terms of Conflict; and 5) Terms of Governance. In many instances, the categorisations may overlap—for example shaykh placed in the “Terms of Religious Discourse” can also be placed in the “Terms and

¹⁵ Ibid. 225-227

Names of People” category; however, the choices are sufficient for the demonstrative purposes of this analysis. These terms allow a reading of the texts, essentially, without the vowels. The correlations of terms reveals how the building blocks were structurally arranged in the narrative. Let us elaborate on a few terms.

B. SAMPLE ANALYSES

The honorific, Sayyidnā, for Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ, the seventh most frequent term in the combined accounts, is not found in J-TJG. Harold Bowen noted that Juwaynī could not bring himself to apply the sacred honorific Sayyidnā (our Master) for Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ whom he considered to be the arch-heretic.¹⁶ He referred to the dāʿī by his name or by pejoratives such “the accursed”. Sayyidnā is the fifth (R-JT, 103 times) and fourth (Q-ZT, 72 times) most frequent occurring term in the other two chronicles. Similarly, Juwayni did not use Rafīqān (friends, comrades) for the Nizari Ismailis, preferring pejoratives such as malāḥida (heretics), whereas Rashid al-Dīn and Qashani, in almost all instances, referred to the Nizaris as Rafīqān: R-JT, (82 times) and Q-ZT, (101 times) making it the eight most frequently occurring term across the three chronicles. The term qatala (to kill) is the fifth most frequent term in the combined accounts and third and sixth in R-JT and Q-ZT respectively while it does not appear in J-TJG. The latter two accounts, in Muḥammad Taqī Dānishpazhūh’s editions, include lists of forty-seven and forty-eight assassinations respectively which add to the frequency of the term.¹⁷

Lexematic analyses have only been done for concordances in the study of scripture; however, with the availabilities of digitised texts and use of qualitative and quantitative analysis software, 21st century philologists can look at their texts at the super-structural levels to apprehend authorial focalisation and pre-commitments. Digital methodologies, novel analytical approaches and the use of artificial intelligence models are revolutionising the processes and results of textual analyses!¹⁸

2. Two Narrative of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ in the Ilkhanid Chronicles

Let us continue our analyses at the narrative level of the Ilkhanid accounts of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ. The three chronicles follow a common outline from Ḥasan’s birth to death—his early life to the assassination of Niẓām al-Mulk in 1092 is presented in two narratives.

¹⁶ Harold Bowen, “The Sar-gudhasht-i Sayyidnā, the “Tale of the Three Schoolfellows” and the waṣāyā of the Nizām al-Mulk,” JRAS 4 (1931).

¹⁷ Manuscripts of the Jāmiʿ al-tawārikh do not have long lists of assassinations. Muḥammad Taqī Dānishpazhūh’s editions compiled these from listings in Qashani’s Zubdat al-tawārikh Tehran University MS 9067 copied Muharram, 989/February-March 1581

¹⁸ Hajiani, “Reconstructing Alamut.” 236

A. THE CHRONOLOGICAL NARRATIVE

The first narrative in all three accounts follows a common arc: Ḥasan's origins; his adoption of Ismailism; his journey to Cairo; his return to Iran and da'wa activities culminating in the acquisition of Alamūt; the doctrine of ta'lim; propagation of the da'wa south of the Caspian Sea and in Qūhistān; and the conflict with the Saljuqs; assassination of Niẓām al-Mulk. Juwaynī, however, omits a number of episodes relating to Ḥasan's adoption of Ismailism and the details of his Egyptian route that appear in R-JT and Q-ZT.

B. THE "THREE SCHOOL FELLOWS STORY"

The second narrative reverts to Ḥasan's childhood with the "three school fellows story," which ends with Ḥasan—betrayed by Niẓām al-Mulk—fleeing the Saljuq court to seek refuge with a Ra'īs Abū al-Faḍl. There he exclaimed: "Oh alas! if I had two men of the same mind and direction with me I would give an answer to that Turk and this peasant."¹⁹ The Ra'īs thought it impossible to bring down the Saljuq Empire with just two comrades and quietly began to treat Ḥasan for melancholia. Grasping the Ra'īs's attitude, Ḥasan departed for Egypt and after his return, commenced his revolt.

Juwaynī omitted this story entirely, displacing the Ra'īs Abū al-Faḍl incident to Ḥasan's return from Egypt—a repositioning Bowen attributed to chronological ordering and Juwaynī's reluctance to elevate Ḥasan by associating him with the illustrious wazīr and renowned poet.²⁰ That Juwaynī then rejoined the arc found in R-JT and Q-ZT confirms common sourcing across all three chronicles. They all conclude this second narrative by again recording the killing of Niẓām al-Mulk and alluding to suspicious circumstances surrounding Malikshāh's death a month later.

¹⁹ Ironically, while rejecting the "three school fellows" story as spurious, many scholars have read this sentence as a basis for "Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ revolt" and an expression of anti-Turk "Persian 'national' sentiment". cf. Rashīd al-Dīn Faḍl Allāh, Jāmi'. dibācha p. 11ff; Rashīd al-Dīn Faḍl Allāh, Muḥammad Dabīr Siyāqī, ed. Faṣlī az Jāmi' al-tawārīkh: Sarguzasht-i Ḥasan Šabbāḥ wa jānishinān-i ū yā Tārīkh-i firqa-yi Rafīqān wa Ismā'iliyān-i Alamūt. (Tehran: Nashr-i Alburz, 1987). dibācha p. 3ff; Farhad Daftary, The Ismā'īlīs: Their History and Doctrines. (Cambridge; New York: Cambridge University Press, 2007). 361; David Durand-Guédy, Iranian Elites and Turkish Rulers a History of Isfahan in the Saljuq Period. (London; New York: Routledge, 2010). 163; Peter Willey, Eagle's Nest: Ismaili Castles in Iran and Syria. (London; New York: I.B. Tauris, 2005). 208. It is to avoid this type of back-projection of 20th century ethno-nationalisms that I avoid the term "state" and instead use "polity"

²⁰ Bowen, "Sar-gudhasht."

C. OUTLINES OF THE ACCOUNT OF ḤASAN-I ŠABBĀḤ

Figure 2 depicts Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ's biography, divided in two parts. The first part from his childhood to the death of Nizām al-Mulk consists of the two narratives. The second part follows a near-linear chronology in Juwayni's account whilst the two longer accounts are chronologically discontinuous as indicated by the blue arrows.

Figure 2: Narrative Outlines of J-TJG, R-JT and Q-ZT Accounts

In the second part, the plot and time sequences become haphazard tending to towards thematic rather than chronological presentation. As an example, R-JT and Q-ZT record the following order of events: a) the Nizari acquisition of Girdkūh; b) Sanjar's relations with the Nizari commander Ra'īs Muẓaffar at Girdkūh; c) then Bark-yāruq's relations with them; d) massacre of Ismailis in Isfahan; and e) the capture of Shāhdiz outside of Isfahan by Muḥammad b. Malikshāh. These events are dated: a) 1096; b) ca 1105; c) earlier part of the reign of Bark-yāruq 1094-1104; d) ca 1100-1101; and e) 1107.²¹

I have traced the R-JT and Q-ZT accounts of the Saljuq capture of Shāhdiz fortress from the dā'i Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-Malik b. 'Aṭṭāsh (d. 1107) to the Saljūqnāma of Ḥāshim al-Dīn Nīshāpūrī and Ibn al-Athīr's al-Kāmil. Its absence from Juwaynī points to a gap in the Sarguzasht—likely deliberate, since Aḥmad's prominent role leading the Iranian da'wa would have overshadowed the hagiographic focus on Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ.²² Juwaynī maintained his chronological flow by not mentioning Bark-yāruq and the events at Isfahan. The Nizari sources used by Rashid al-Dīn and Qashani recorded the friendly relations and diplomacy of the Nizaris with Bark-yāruq and Sanjar during the reign of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ. In addition to avoiding anachronism, Juwaynī's account also avoided any question of Saljuq disinclinations toward Sunnism.²³

Juwaynī's Ta'riḥ-i jahāngushā's regnal accounts of the eight rulers of the Nizari polity became a template for later dynastic histories. The more extensive content of Rashīd al-Dīn's Jāmi' al-tawāriḥ, especially the “three school fellows” story became more prominent in later writing. After Juwaynī, Rashid al-Dīn and Qashani, there is no indication that the Nizari da'wa literature from Alamūt was available to later historians. Yet the biography of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ continued to be embellished.

IV. Derivative Historiography after the Destruction of the Nizari Polity

Later chroniclers followed the Ilkhanid paradigms; however, beginning with Qazwīnī's Ta'riḥ-i guzīda the “three school fellows” story became the primary narrative of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ's life-history such that the chronological (auto)biographical narrative was overshadowed by this legendary anachronistic narrative. For centuries after the demise of the Nizari polity, Ḥasan's biography served as a contested site of memory, ideology, and textual authority, and has continued to be reformulated within the socio-political and religious discourses of the author's times.

²¹ R-JT 116ff; Q-ZT 139ff

²² Hajiani, “Reconstructing Alamut.” 320-322 and 332ff

²³ Ibid. 369-384

A. ḤAMD ALLĀH MUSTAWFĪ QAZWĪNĪ

The late Ilkhanid chronicler, Ḥamd Allāh Mustawfī Qazwīnī (d. ca. 1344), in his Ta'rikh-i guzida (1330) departs significantly from the earlier chronicle accounts of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ. He foregrounded the “three school fellows” story and introduced a “cowhide deception” in which Ḥasan negotiated to purchase land the size of a cowhide, then he cut the cowhide into strips to encircle the entire fortress, and thereby deceived ‘Alawī Mahdī into surrender of Alamūt for a draft of 3,000 dinars.²⁴

Several elements of Qazwīnī’s account are historically anomalous or unparalleled:

- Ḥasan went not to Fatimid Egypt but to Syria in 1079, where he anachronistically propagated the da‘wa in favour of Nizār while al-Mustanṣir was still imam-caliph, and returned to Iran bearing Nizār’s son.
- By privileging the “three school fellows” narrative and largely bypassing the chronological first narrative, Qazwīnī reduced Ḥasan’s conversion from an intellectual-spiritual quest to an act of political expediency.
- Where the earlier chronicles imply the marginalisation of women by noting that Ḥasan sent his womenfolk to safer fortresses in wartime, Qazwīnī inverted this: Ḥasan’s wife seduced a royal concubine to plant a dagger in Sanjar’s (r. 1118-1157) bedchamber, after which Ḥasan sent the sultan a message—that the dagger in the floor could just as easily have been in his “soft breast”—inducing Sanjar to cease hostilities and establish a tribute.²⁵
- Doctrinal discussion is minimal, confined to an elegiac closing paragraph in which Ḥasan is said to have devised ta’wīlāt (allegorical interpretations) of the uṣūl and furū‘ of the madhhab (roots and branches of the creed), turning the ẓāhir (exoteric) of the sharī‘a (interpretation of Divine Law) into bāṭin (esoteric) and then bāṭin into bāṭin again—from which, Qazwīnī concluded, the name “Bāṭinī” derived.²⁶

Some of Qazwīnī’s divergences from Juwaynī and Rashīd al-Dīn are attributable to abridgement, but the unique material he introduced raises broader source questions. Living in Qazwīn—some sixty miles from Alamūt—he was plausibly in contact with Nizaris, their opponents, and others preserving variant oral traditions about the polity. Narrative analysis of his accounts suggest that he did not have access to Nizari da‘wa literature but privileged oral reports over the written chronicles. Whether he accurately recorded these reports or partially (mis)remembered them, several of his narrative innovations became central to later historiography on the Nizaris.

²⁴ Ḥamd Allāh Mustawfī Qazwīnī, ‘Abd al-Ḥusayn Navā’ī, ed. Ta’rikh-i guzida. (Tehran: Amir Kabir, 1985). 519

²⁵ Ibid. 520. This intensifies Juwaynī’s disdain for Sanjar’s relations with the Nizaris. Juwaynī, Jahān-gushā v3. 214-215 Tr: Juwaynī, HWC. 682

²⁶ Qazwīnī, Guzida. 522

B. REFORMULATIONS OF ILKHANID PARADIGMS

The Tīmūrid historian, Muḥammad b. Khwāndshāh b. Maḥmūd Mīrkhwānd (d. 1498), wrote the most polemical reformulation of the account of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ. It begins with a refutation of Ḥasan's ancestry and origins based on the so-called “waṣāyā” (Testament) of Nizām al-Mulk.²⁷ In his version of the “three school fellows” story, Mīrkhwānd stated that Ḥasan's father was accused of unbelief and impiety (kufr wa zandaqa, lit.: unbelief and dualism), he claimed Arab descent stating that “I am descended from Ṣabbāḥ Ḥimyarī; my father came from Kūfa to Qumm and from Qumm to Rayy.” Nizām al-Mulk said that the “people of Khurāsān, especially of Ṭūs rejected this and said: ‘his forefathers came from the villages of this region.’” In the Ilkhanid chronicles, it was Ḥasan—not his father—who claimed Ṣabbāḥid Ḥimyarī descent. The family had come from Kūfa to Rayy via Qumm. In Mīrkhwānd's account they were from the east. Below we will analyse why this was significant.

C. NEW PARADIGMS

Mīrkhwānd's grandson, Ghiyāth al-Dīn Khwāndamīr (d. 1535) wrote about the Nizaris in three texts. The earliest was the Ma'āthir al-mulūk (Impediments to the Rulers, 1498) contains very brief biographic sketches of the rulers of the Nizari polity. In his Dastūr al-wuzarā' (The Illustrious Wazīrs, 1509), he collected biographies of famous wazīrs and included that of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ which is identical to Mīrkhwānd's account.²⁸ His most important work is the Ḥabīb al-siyar (Beloved Biographies, ca 1529), a general history from the earliest times to the end of the life of the founder of the Safawid Empire, Shāh Ismā'īl I (d. 1524), includes an account of the Fatimid and Nizari rulers which also bears great similarity to the account in Rawḍat al-ṣafā' particularly in its reformulations of the account of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ.

²⁷ Muḥammad b. Khwāndshāh Mīrkhwānd, Jamshīd Kiyānfār, ed. Ta'rikh-i rawḍat al-ṣafā'. (Tehran: Aṣāṭir, 2001). Volume IV: Dynasties contemporary with the 'Abbāsids; Edward Granville Browne, A Literary History of Persia Vol. 2—From Firdawsī to Sa'dī (1000-1290). (Bethesda, Md.: Iranbooks, 1997). II:191-192, 212. The Rawḍat al-ṣafā' fi sirat al-anbiyā' wa'l-mulūk wa'l-khulāfā' (Garden of Purity Containing the Biographies of Prophets, Kings and Caliphs) was written in the reign of Sulṭān Ḥusayn Bāyqarā' (r. 1469-1470; 1470-1506/873-875; 875-911) in Herat.

²⁸ Ghiyāth al-Dīn Khwānd Amīr, Sa'īd Nafīsī, ed. Dastūr al-wuzarā': shāmil-i aḥwāl-i wuzarā'-yi Islām tā inqirāḍ-i Taymūriyān. (Tehran: Intishārāt-i Iqbāl, 1976). 169-178 the text exactly matches the entry on Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ in Sarguzasht-i Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ. Persian ms Majmū'a no. 901. Library, Museum and Document Center of the Iranian Parliament. Tehran 21-29. See further discussion below.

These narratives add another layer to the “three-school-fellows” story and yet another spurious episode to Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ’s life. Later histories of the Nizaris emulated Mirkhwānd and Khwāndamīr’s accounts.

D. GENEALOGIES OF TEXTS

Numerous other authors also participated in these genealogies of texts drawing on paradigms developed since the Mongol destruction of the Nizari polity. All such historical writing telescoped back to the accounts of Rashīd al-Dīn and ultimately, of Juwaynī. The embellishments of the “three-school-fellows” and other narratives were invented by author-historians as part of the religio-political discourses of their times with Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ as a stand-in for heretical socio-political disrupters.

Figure 3: Paradigms of Historical Writing on the Nizaris

J-TJG = Juwaynī d. 1283 Ta’rīkh-i jahāngushā (1260)
R-JT = Rashīd al-Dīn d. 1318 Jāmi’ al-tawārīkh (1314)
Qzw = Ḥamd Allāh Mustawfī Qazwīnī d. ca 1344 Ta’rīkh-i guzīda (1330); Ẓafarnāma (1334); Nuzhat al-qulūb (ca 1340)
Shbk = Shabānkārā’ī d. 1358 Majma’ al-ansāb (1337)
Ntnz = Mu’īn al-Dīn Naṭanzī d. c15 Muntakhab al-tawārīkh (1414)
Abru = Ḥāfiẓ-i Abru d. 1430 Majma’ al-tawārīkh (1417-18)
Yzd = Sharaf al-Dīn ‘Alī Yazdī d. 1454 Ẓafarnāma (ca 1428)
MirK = Mīrkhwānd d. 1498 Rawḥat aṣ-ṣafā’ (1497)
Khw = Khwāndamīr d. ca 1535 Ma’āthir al-mulūk (pre 1498); Dastūr al-wuzarā’ (ca 1509); Ḥabīb al-siyar (1529)
Ghfr = Aḥmad b. M. Ghaffārī d. 1567-68 Ta’rīkh-i Niğāristān (1551)
Ttw = Aḥmad Tatawī Qazwīnī d. 1587? Taḥrīkh-i alfī (ca. 1582)
D-Mz = Anonymous c17 Dabistān-i madhāhib (1670)
Bfqī = Muḥammad Mufīd Mustawfī Bafqī d. c17 Jāmi’-i Mufīdī (1679)

The arrows and thicknesses indicate dependencies and the vectors of sources

V. Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ in Nizari Da’wa Literature

The portrait of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ in Nizari da’wa literature has also undergone many transformations over time. We find elements of the image in fragments of Nizari writing embedded in the Ilkhanid chronicles; in the teachings and writings attributed to Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ and in later doctrinal texts. Since the narratives of the Sarguzasht-i Sayyidnā and the “three school fellows” story were not widely known until the Ilkhanid chroniclers accessed them after the capture of Alamut, it is safe to assume that they were prepared for internal purposes. These sira (biography) and manāqib (excellences, virtues) texts may have been used for teaching and training of functionaries of the da‘wa and to foster communal unity, conformity and identification with heroic leaders. Through careful analyses, it is possible to separate story from discourse—what was recorded and why and how it was recorded—in the Ilkhanid accounts, then a second layer of analyses is needed to excavate story and discourse in the embedded (auto)biographical narratives from the Nizari sources. In this manner, let us examine the execution of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ’s two sons.

A. EXECUTIONS OF ḤASAN-I ṢABBĀḤ’S SONS

All three chronicles, drawing on the Sarguzasht, record that Ḥasan executed his son Ustād Ḥusayn for complicity in the murder of the dā‘ī Ḥusayn Qā’inī. A year later, a Zaydī ‘Alid who had been promoting himself as imam was found to be the actual instigator and executed. A second son, Muḥammad, was put to death on charges of wine-drinking. Ḥasan cited both executions as proof that he had never conducted the da‘wa for personal or dynastic ends²⁹—a claim prefaced by Juwaynī and Qāshānī that Ḥasan founded his cause on asceticism and the enjoining of righteousness (Q3:110),³⁰ and that during his thirty-five years at Alamūt no one drank wine openly.³¹

Why did Ḥasan’s Nizari biographers preserve this material? Prima facie, the executions affirm Ḥasan’s exclusive loyalty to the imamate, but closer reading exposes fractures beneath the surface. Ustād Ḥusayn’s execution was premature: the Zaydī claimant identified a year later as the real instigator casts serious doubt on the son’s complicity. As for Muḥammad, Ḥasan’s strict adherence to sharī‘ī precepts would have permitted the ḥadd punishment of flogging; resort to execution instead suggests that wine-drinking was a pretext and as in the case of Ustād Ḥusayn, Muḥammad represented antinomian opposition requiring extirpation rather than mere correction.

²⁹ Hajiani, “Reconstructing Alamut.” 360-368. cf. Juwaynī, HWC. 643 fn 13: Ismaili b. Jafar was labelled as a drunkard — he had in fact participated in a “seditious” enterprise that Jafar disapproved of.

³⁰ from Q3:110: “enjoining what is right, forbidding what is wrong”

³¹ Juwaynī, Jahān-gushā v3. 209 tr.: Juwaynī, HWC. 679; Rashīd al-Dīn Faḍl Allāh, Jāmi‘. 123-124; Qāshānī, Zubdat.159

The Nizari author's inclusion of these troubling episodes—handled with deliberate circumspection—signals they were too consequential to omit. They warn against disloyalty to the imamate. Yet the very loudness of that declaration of loyalty points to the subdued factionalism at the heart of the Nizari polity. The Sarguzasht, in common with much Ismaili writing, thus performs multiple functions at once: hagiography, political warning, and negotiation between patron expectation and wider reception and their different readings.³²

B. ḤASAN-I ŠABBĀḤ AND NĀŠIR-I KHUSRAW

The narrative of Ḥasan's executions of his sons is also found in the Ḥikāyat-i Sayyid Nāšir-i Khusraw, an undated treatise with no information of authorship or provenance which I have dated between 1147-1162.³³ This subaltern text, perhaps, produced by a community of Nizaris persecuted by the Nizari high-command for their desire to end the era of concealment (satr) of the imam, memorialised Ḥasan-i ŠabbāḤ as a sanctified forebear. The text begins with an anachronism that Ḥasan-i ŠabbāḤ told the Raḥīqān (Nizaris) a story that Nāšir-i Khusraw had told him. The two never met—this association would be reformulated in later texts. Second, based on a conversation with the recently arrived imām, Hādī b. Nizār (r 1095-?) who lived in concealment at the foot of Alamūt, Ḥasan understood that his four (not two) sons would turn out to be seditious so he executed them. The treatise construes Ḥasan as prophesying the Qā'im (the messianic Resurrector). Twenty-five years after his death, Ḥasan-i ŠabbāḤ was no longer just a pious, austere leader; now he was construed as an eschatological actor.

C. ḤASAN-I ŠABBĀḤ AS ḤUJJA OF THE QĀ'IM

Ḥasan-i Maḥmūd-i Kātib (d. after 1243) in his Haft Bāb (Seven Chapters, 1200), one of the most important near-contemporary accounts of the doctrine of the Qiyāmat-i buzurg (the Great Resurrection) declared at Alamut on 17 Ramaḍān 559/15 August 1164, recorded that

From the cycle of the Qiyāmat which was prior to the cycle of our Adam, up to the present cycle in which we are - although the Qiyāmat is perpetual (hamishagī) but recurring in relation to the sharī'at - all the good and pious people have identified the supreme ḥujjat (proof) of the Qā'im and have given the glad tidings about him. They have said: 'The position of the ḥujjat in relation to the Qā'im is similar to that of the vicegerents (awṣiyā') to the Prophets with resolution (anbiyā'-i ulūl 'aẓm).³⁴ All the good and pious people of our time also admit that Sayyidnā Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ, may God sanctify his soul and bless us with his meditation (sic, should be mediation) (shafā'at), was the chief ḥujjat of the Qā'im of the Qiyāmat and the Messiah of the cycle of the Qiyāmat who manifested the work of his father (kār-i pidar āshkārā kard).³⁵

³² Hajiani, "Reconstructing Alamut." 360-368.

³³ Shiraz Hajiani, "Ḥikāyat-i Sayyid Nāšir-i Khusraw: Analyses of a subaltern Nizari Ismaili Text Written before the Declaration of the Qiyāmat-i buzurg (the Great Resurrection) in 559/1164," Iranian Studies 58, no. 1 (2025); Shiraz Hajiani, "Manifesto of the Resurrection A critical edition and translation of the Hikayat-i Sayyid Nasir-i Khusraw, a newly uncovered Nizari Ismaili treatise written before the declaration of the Qiyamat-i Buzurg (the Great Resurrection) in 559/1164," Iran (2026).; cf also Hajiani, Concealment and Manifestation. Treatise VII.

Jalal Badakhchani in a footnote to the translation stated that ḥujjat, in general Shi'i usage has the connotation of "proof" or "evidence" of God, in Fatimid usage it signified the most senior dignitary of the da'wa and in Nizari usage it refers to the chief representative of the Imam.³⁶ However, this chapter of the Haft Bāb discusses the transcendent manifestation of the Qā'im who would raise the believers into the paradisiacal presence of God. In this passage, the ḥujja is equated to the imams following the nuṭaqā' (sing. nāṭiq, "speaking prophets" who initiated new dispensations). Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ is thus elevated to the stature of the imams; however, the sentence: ḥujja-yi akbar qā'im-i qiyāmat būda wa 'Īsā-yi dawr-i qiyāmat būd wa kār-i pidar āshkār kard can be translated: "he was the great ḥujjat of the Great Resurrector and the Jesus of the era of the Resurrection who manifested the endeavour of his Father". This adaptation of Christology represents the high status accorded to Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ. In this context, the ḥujjat-i akbar-i Qā'im-i Qiyāmat (the great ḥujjat of the Great Resurrector) is no mere temporal or religious leader but rather the messiah.³⁷

D. ḤASAN-I ṢABBĀḤ AS HARBINGER OF THE RESURRECTION

Naṣīr al-Dīn Ṭūsī (d. 1274) in the Rawḍat al-taslīm (Paradise of Submission, 1243) also construed Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ as a messianic figure. He began the section discussing ta'līm with a description of Ḥasan's rank

Sayyidnā, (our master) - may God sanctify his soul - who was the supreme ḥujjat of our lord the Resurrector of the Resurrection (ḥujjat-i a'ẓim-i mawlānā qā'im al-qiyāmat), the Messiah of the Cycle of Resurrection, the one who blew the first blast of the trumpet of Resurrection (nāfikh-i šūr-i awwal), made his appearance in the year 500 after Hijra. He set out in search of this pure and unique religion, betaking himself to the sacred presence of our lord Mustanṣir - may salutations ensue upon mention of him - and was specially favoured with a vision of the lights of divine assistance (anwār-i ta'yīd). By the command of the latter, he came forth and proclaimed openly the rightly-guided mission (da'wat-i hādīyya) - may God so confirm it! Upon the first blast of the trumpet of the holy mission, he announced the call, asking if knowledge of

³⁴ That is, the six great Prophet-Messengers from Adam to Muḥammad (also called natiq, 'speaker', pl. nutaqā', in Ismaili cosmology), each of whom inaugurates a new dispensation, thus perfecting the religious law of the previous millennial cycle.

³⁵ Ḥasan-i Maḥmūd-i Kātib, Spiritual Resurrection in Shi'i Islam: An Early Ismaili Treatise on the Doctrine of Qiyāmat: Haft Bāb. trans. S. J. Badakhchani (London: I.B.Tauris, 2017). p. 25 Tr: pp 67-68

³⁶ Ibid. p. 67 fn 191

³⁷ Ibid. p. 25.

God is to be attained with or without the guidance of a person. He asked ‘Does reason suffice [as a guide to God] or not?’³⁸

The continuity with the Ḥaft Bāb is obvious; however, Ṭūsī changed ‘Īsā (Jesus) to Masīḥ (Messiah) and added that Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ blew the first blast of the trumpet of Resurrection which refers to the Qur’anic verse: “The Trumpet will be blown, and all who are in the heavens and all who are on the earth will fall dead, except whom God wills. Then it will be blown again, and at once they will be standing, looking on” (Q39:68). Ḥasan’s encounter with the Fatimid imam, al-Mustanṣir and his inauguration of the rightly-guided mission (da‘wat-i hādiyya) suggests reliance on Shahrastānī’s K. milal wa’l-nihal. In Ṭūsī’s elaboration of soteriology, the temporal ḥudūd-i dīn (hierarchy of the da‘wa) resonates with the eschatological Nizari Ismaili Neoplatonic schema of return and Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ occupied a position second only to the Eschatological Redeemer.

E. ḤASAN-I ṢABBĀḤ AS THE PAROUSIA

Doctrinal writing after the destruction of the Nizari polity by the Mongols in 1256, continued these construals of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ. The Ḥaft Bāb-i Abū Ishāq, written in the fifteenth century by Abū Ishāq (d. after 1498), describes Ḥasan drawing from many of the images we have surveyed. Explaining the transference of the imamate from Egypt to Iran, he wrote that after al-Ḥākim became Mawlā-nā Zāhir, and after him, Mawlā-nā Mustanṣir Ma‘ad, Ḥākim Nāṣir-i Khusraw travelled from Balkh to Cairo, was presented to his Majesty, and was appointed the dā‘ī of Khurāsān and Badakhshān. Sayyid-nā (Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ) also came to pay his respects to him. Complete help was meted out in his (Sayyid-nā) affairs, and the son (or descendant) of Mawlā-nā Nizār to whom naṣṣ of Imamāt had been made was entrusted to the charge of Sayyid-nā who was appointed the ḥujjat of Daylamān, Tārum and adjacent localities.³⁹

There is close resonance here with the account of Qazwīnī. Describing the continuity of imamate in Ismaili notions of cyclical history, Abū Ishāq wrote that at the time of Jesus, Mawlā-nā was called Ma‘add, and at the time of Muṣṭafā—‘Alī. And when Jesus said that he was going to return and take up the task of the Qiyāmat, showing God to people, he referred to Sayyid-nā. All signs have become manifested in him, from that date and until his, Sayyid-nā’s, appearance. And Muṣṭafā said that ‘Alī ibn Abi Ṭālib,—may God beautify

³⁸ Naṣīr al-Dīn Muḥammad b. Muḥammad Ṭūsī, Paradise of Submission (Rawḍat al-taslīm): a Medieval Treatise on Ismaili Thought. trans. Seyyed Jalal Badakhchani (London; New York: I.B. Tauris, 2005). 195-196 Tr: 158 slightly modified

³⁹ Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm Quhistānī, Wladimir Ivanow, ed. Haft bāb, or Seven Chapters. (Bombay: The Ismaili Society, 1959). 23 Tr 23

his countenance!⁴⁰—on the day of Resurrection will raise the banner of the Qiyāmat single-handed.⁴¹

Contrasting Sunni construals of Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ; in this arc, we have seen him portrayed by Nizari authors—through the screen of Ilkhanid chroniclers—as a zealous socio-political leader and increasingly as an eschatological figure culminating in Abū Ishāq’s construal of him as the parousia, the second coming of Christ!

F. MANUSCRIPTS OF THE SARGUZASHT

Let us conclude this survey with the Sarguzasht-i Sayyidnā. The Library, Museum and Document Center of the Iranian Parliament houses a manuscript entitled Sarguzasht-i Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ.⁴² The manuscript includes the biographies of many notables including Nizām al-Mulk. The fly leaf gives a titular notation: “Letters (munsha’āt) and Accounts (aḥwāl) of some Wazīrs and the Importance of Certain Matter (khawāṣṣ-i ba’zī ashiyā’), together with the Treatise on the ‘Beginning and End’ (Āghāz va anjām) of Khwāja Naṣīr al-Dīn Ṭūsī, may mercy be upon him”. The entry on Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ is actually from Khwāndamīr’s Dastūr al-wuzarā’ and is identical to the regnal accounts of Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ in Ta’rīkh-i ḥabīb al-siyar and Mirkhwānd’s Rawḍat al-ṣafā’; unfortunately, this is not the Sarguzasht-i Sayyidnā.⁴³

There are two manuscripts (nos. 162 and 177) in the Persian Manuscript Collection of the Institute of Ismaili Studies entitled Sarguzasht-i Sayyidnā.⁴⁴ Delia Cortese has provided a detailed study of the correlations between MS-177 and the Ilkhanid accounts. Miklós Sárközy has postulated that these manuscripts evidence “the survival of hitherto unknown parts of texts dating to the Alamūt period.”⁴⁵ MS-177 was completed on Sunday, 22 October 1916 in ⁴⁰ This pious invocation upon the imam-caliph, ‘Alī b. Abī Ṭālib is unusual in Ismaili da’wa literature.

⁴¹ Ibid. 40 Tr 40

⁴² Sarguzasht-i Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ. Persian ms Majmū’a no. 901. Library, Museum and Document Center of the Iranian Parliament. Tehran. 21-29; Delia Cortese, “Lost and found: the Sarguzasht-i Sayyid-nā. Facts and fiction of Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ’s travel to Egypt vis-à-vis the political and intellectual life of 5th/11th century Fāṭimid Cairo,” in Science in the City of Fortune: The Dustūr Al-Munajjimīn and Its World, ed. Eva Orthmann, and Petra G. Schmidl (Berlin: EBVerlag, 2017).

⁴³ Hajiani, “Reconstructing Alamut.” 388-389

⁴⁴ Sarguzasht-i Sayyid-nā. Persian mss 162 and 177. Library of The Institute of Ismaili Studies. London. I am preparing an edition and translation for a forthcoming publication.

⁴⁵ Miklós Sárközy, The Early Nizari Ismailis and Their Neighbouring Powers: Politics in the Caspian Provinces. (Bloomsbury Publishing, 2024). 2. in the preceding paragraph he states: “The actual author of this work remains unknown, but it is seen as a very popular work since the second part survived the destruction of Alamūt both as an independent manuscript and in paraphrase as part of the chronicles by Juwaynī, Rashīd al-Dīn and Kāshānī, the main Ilkhanid historians to write about the Nizārī Ismaili state.” It is unclear if “independent manuscript”

Bombay by Akbar Khwāja Mu'min; MS-162 which appears to be copy is full of errors has no information of authorship or dating. A comparison of narrative elements we have surveyed in this chapter illustrates not only the author's sourcing but his framing of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ within the discourse of his time.

Table 3: Comparison of narrative elements in MS-177 with Ilkhanid chronicles and Qazwīnī's Tārīkh-i guzīda

Narrative Element	Ilkhanid Chronicles (J-TJG / R-JT / Q-ZT)	Qazwīnī (Tārīkh-i guzīda)	MS-177 (IIS, 1916)
Ḥasan's genealogy	Ṣabbāḥid Ḥimyarī (rulers of Yemen) descent; migrated Kūfa → Qumm → Rayy	Ṣabbāḥid Ḥimyarī descent disputed via apocryphal waṣāyā of Nizām al-Mulk; family from Khurāsān	Descended from Imām Muḥammad Bāqir; father was an Ismaili; migrated Kūfa → Qumm → Rayy
Father's religious identity	Ithnā'asharī	Accused of irreligion and idolatry; claimed Arab lineage to dissimulate	Pious, learned Ismaili
Impetus for "conversion"	Intellectual-spiritual quest	conversion reduced to political expediency in "three school fellows" story	Dream revelation from God and the Prophet; encounter with luminous being (shakhṣī-yi nūrānī)
"Three school fellows"	R-JT and Q-ZT: in Second life-story of HS; J-TJG omits it; "weak" conversion narrative	Foregrounded as the primary narrative framework	Ḥasan fled Malikshāh's court after he was betrayed and sultan was angry
Relations with 'Aṭṭāsh	HS deputised by 'Aṭṭāsh (R-JT and Q-ZT)	Silent	HS studied philosophy with 'Aṭṭāsh in Rūdbār
Route Egypt to Iran	Via Syria → Iraq → Iranian cities	returned from Syria → Iran (no journey to Egypt)	Aleppo → Baghdad → "Khwaristān" → Isfahan
Acquisition of Alamūt	Seized and purchased from 'Alawī Mahdī for 3000 dinars (less juridical framing)	"Cowhide deception"; 'Alawī Mahdī had no power to resist; (no juridical framing)	"Cowhide purchase"; formalised before a qāḍī ; 'Alawī Mahdī defeated by his own shar'ī argument (juridical)
Ascent to Alamūt	483/1090	Not precisely dated	484/August–September 1091
Role of women	HS sent womenfolk to safer fortresses (marginalisation implied)	HS's wife seduced a royal concubine to plant a dagger in Sanjar's chamber; HS sent threatening message → Sanjar established tribute	Silent refers to the IIS manuscripts. Cf also. Miklós Sárközy, "Alamūt and Badakhshān: Newly Identified Sargudhasht-i Sayyidnā Manuscripts and their Background," in Texts, Scribes and Transmission: Manuscript Cultures of the Ismaili Communities and Beyond (London: I.B. Tauris, 2022).

Concealed imam at Alamūt	Hādī b. Nizār arrived at Alamūt with Ḥasan-i Saʿīd (R-JT and Q-ZT)	Silent	Hādī b. Nizār arrived; asked to remain in concealment
--------------------------	--	--------	---

What are we to make of this? Are MSS 162 and 177 witnesses of the “original” Sarguzasht-i Sayyidnā? I am inclined to suggest otherwise.⁴⁶ As the tabulation shows, the author of MS-177 was clearly drawing from the repertoire of narratives of Ḥasan’s biography from daʿwa literature and non-Ismaili historiographic sources and introduced several flaws in the treatise. The author was apparently not fully conversant with geography—Alexandria is not on the route from Iran to Aleppo and Khwāristān may be mistaken replacement of Khūzistān. Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ took control of Alamūt in 1090 not a year later as in the text.

Let us briefly examine some theories of biographical studies that apply to this research and then we will conclude our analyses of this eight-hundred year-long biographical discourse we have mapped.

VI. Life-narrative and the Text

The autobiographical act is a declarative effort by the author to foreground aspects of their life experiences to embellish certain of images of their portrait. Such portraits often are retrospective and self-aggrandising and attempt to fix meritorious images for present and future audiences. While the author may draw upon evidentiary sources, ultimate authority rests in the narration of their own lived experiences. The biographical act, on the other hand, is a constructive effort in which the biographer assembles a range of evidence either to lionise or discredit their subject. They may have recourse to different types of sources, recall of the contemporaries and even the authorities of experts. In both cases “the usefulness of evidence for their stories lies in the ways in which the authors employ that evidence to support, supplement, or offer commentary on idiosyncratic acts of remembering.”⁴⁷

Both the self-life-narrator and the biographer engage in several intersecting “rhetorical acts: justifying their own perceptions, upholding their reputations, disputing the accounts of others, settling scores, conveying cultural information, and inventing desirable futures, among others.” Their interpretations of past actualities narrow the aperture to sharpen targeted images; however, the wider contexts become blurred in the background. Reducing ⁴⁶ I am preparing the edition, translation and analyses of IIS-MSS 162 and 177 for a forthcoming journal article.

⁴⁷ Sidonie Smith, and Julia Watson, Reading Autobiography Now: An Updated Guide for Interpreting Life Narratives, Third Edition. (U of Minnesota Press, 2024). 12 the narrations “to facticity strips them of their rhetorical, literary, ethical, political, and cultural dimensions.”⁴⁸ The autobiographical act ceases once the narrative has been produced and certainly with the death of the self-life-narrator. The biographic act has no such limitations in that commentaries and formal biographies can continue to reformulate the subject’s life-narratives.

A. BIOGRAPHIC DISCOURSE

Our four surveys have demonstrated that Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ’s (auto)biography, after it was first recorded, underwent repeated revisions. Friedrich Schleiermacher developed the concept of the “hermeneutic circle” which was further elaborated by Hans-Georg Gadamer in which understanding of the particular deepens the understanding of the universal and greater understanding of the universal deepens that of the particular—the cyclicity leads to ever expanding apprehensions of the text within its context.⁴⁹ The centuries-long biographical discourse we have surveyed operates in a very different manner. Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ’s past actualities have receded into hagiographical accretions or antagonistic stereotyping of the repurposed images such that past actualities remain only as distant resonances.⁵⁰ Over this time, he has become identified with the causes of his renown and as Sidonie Smith and Julia Watson argue, the “events for which the subject becomes renowned determine what the biographer selects to interpret as formative.”⁵¹

This literary production has been performative and not representational; “instead of trying to represent a person’s life and therewith the past accurately, the authors fictionalize something of major symbolic significance from an actual life in order to project into existence a new, better, and more socially just way of thinking and being in the authorial present and for the indefinite future”.⁵² In historiographical texts the narrative is anchored in collective time whereas in biographical texts the subject’s temporal framework governs the narrative. In the repurposed biographical texts; however, there is a reversal in that the author imposes collective time—often their own—on to the life-narration. Such reversal is

⁴⁸ Ibid. 9

⁴⁹ Friedrich Schleiermacher. Hermeneutics: The Handwritten Manuscripts, Translated by Heinz Kimmerle. (Missoula, MT: Scholars Press for the American Academy of Religion, 1977). p. 113; Gadamer. Truth and Method. pp 267ff

⁵⁰ Hajiani, “Reconstructing Alamut.” 124ff

⁵¹ Smith, and Watson, Reading Autobiography Now: An Updated Guide for Interpreting Life Narratives, Third Edition. 10

⁵² Ibid. 14. While the authors might have considered their depictions of the Nizaris through the repurposing of Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ’s biography as socially just, it is more apt to label these antagonistic texts as inciting and virulent towards their subject devoid of any notion of social justice.

not explicit and is discerned only through careful analyses. Let us conclude by mapping the biographical discourse of the Sarguzasht-i Sayyidnā over the past eight hundred years and assess what our study reveals about the nature of the “text”.

The chronological (auto)biography fragmentarily surviving in the Ilkhanid chronicles was embellished with the “three school fellows” story. In the 1330s Qazwīnī tarnished Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ’s characterisation as pious loyal and God-fearing by adding the “cowhide deception” to his purchase of Alamūt. Qazwīnī wrote his account as some Nizaris were trying to recapture Alamūt.⁵³ In his account, Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ’s killing of the “original owner” of Alamūt and taking back the purchase price may invoke discourses of Qazwīnī’s time.

Similarly, around 1497, Mirkhwand quoted the apocryphal waṣāyā (testament) of Niẓām al-Mulk to cast Ḥasan as a heretical liar and a threat to society. Following the attempted assassination of Shāhrukh b. Timūr (r 1370-1447) in February 1427 by a Ḥurūfī activist, intellectuals beyond Ḥurūfī circles were purged.⁵⁴ Many Ḥurūfīs—along with the Nuqṭawīs—theologically rooted in Nizari Ismailism and a host of messianic movements were active at the time.⁵⁵ In 1501, Shāh Ismā‘īl supported by his Qizilbash disciples founded the Safawid Empire. During this time, the Ismailis around Anjudān and later in Herat began periods of cultural and literary efflorescence.⁵⁶ Mu‘īn al-Dīn Muḥammad al-Zamachī al-Isfizārī writing in Herat around the same time noted that “it is well known that even now from several places, the kharāj-i Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ is separated and sent to his grave. To the extent that it is said some old women, from every ten skeins of yarn they spin, set aside one skein as the ‘ushr-i Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ (tithe of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ)—whom they call imām (sic)”.⁵⁷ Viewed in this tumultuous religio-political context, Mirkhwand’s polemical reworking of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ’s biography can be seen as part of the repetitive pattern of warning of socio-political disruption caused by the heretics (malāḥida).

Many data-points can be added to our charting of the biographical discourses by interlacing our surveys with historical events. Let us turn back to Khwāja Mu’min’s Sarguzasht-i Sayyidnā.

⁵³ Daftary, Ismailis. 410-411

⁵⁴ Ilker Evrim Binbaş, “The Anatomy of a Regicide Attempt: Shāhrukh, the Ḥurūfīs, and the Timurid Intellectuals in 830/1426–27,” JRAS 23, no. 3 (2013).

⁵⁵ Peter Jackson, and Laurence Lockhart, The Cambridge History of Iran Vol. 7: the Timurid and Safavid Periods. (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1968). 623ff; 644ff.

⁵⁶ Daftary, Ismailis. 422ff

⁵⁷ Muḥammad Isfizārī, and Muḥammad Kāzīm. Imām, Muḥammad Kāzīm Imām, ed. Rawḍāt al-Jannāt fī Awṣāf-i Madīnat-i Hirāt: Dar Waṣf-i Ma‘arifāt al-Arḍi wa Jughrāfiyā-yi Tārīkhī. (Tihārān: Dānishgāh-i Tihārān, 1959). 307

He wrote in the wake of the Aga Khan (1866) and Ḥājji Bībī Cases (1908) in which the legitimacy and authority of the Nizari imams, Ḥasan ‘Alī Shāh, Aga Khan I (r 1817-1881) and Sulṭān Mahomed Shāh, Aga Khan III (r 1885-1957) were contested in the British colonial courts.⁵⁸ This was a time when schisms tore apart the Khoja community in India into Sunni, Ithnā‘asharī and Ismaili branches—the latter remained loyal to the Nizari imams. Around the time, Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ’s biography was deployed in the sectarian polemics. In 1915, Edalji Dhanji Kaba (d. 1925), a prolific Ithnā‘asharī Khoja author, published a monograph in entitled Ḥasan bin Ṣabbāḥ yāne Alamaut-nā (sic, Alamut-nā) Shaykh al-Jabal nu Jīvan Charitr (Guj.: Ḥasan b. Ṣabbāḥ: the Life and Character of Alamūt’s Old Man of the Mountain) in which he assembled an array of attacks on Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ from pre-modern sources to delegitimise the Ismailis of his time. A year later, Alimamed Janmamed Chunara, a Nizari Ismaili scholar, replied with Alamot no Yoddhā yāne Ḥasan bin Ṣabbāḥ (Guj.: The Warrior of Alamūt: Ḥasan ibn Ṣabbāḥ) and in a prefatory letter attacked Dhanji Kaba’s claims. The latter followed up with an even longer text entitled Ḥasan bin Ṣabbāḥ par Uḍtī Najar (Guj.: A Glance back to Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ) in 1920 where he doubled down on his anti-Ismaili claims.

In this context, Khwāja Mu‘min cast Ḥāsan as a descendant of both Himyārī and ‘Alid genealogies. In the sectarian milieu, the author avoided associating Ḥasan’s father with the creeds he would have considered schismatic; namely his Ithnā‘asharī origin in the Ilkhanid chronicles nor the “devout yet misguided man with corrupt beliefs” according to the apocryphal “waṣāyā” of Niẓām al-Mulk in Mirkhwand and Khwandamir’s accounts.⁵⁹ According to a purported letter of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ to Malikshāh, his father was “a follower of the Shāfi‘ī creed”.⁶⁰ In this twentieth century Sarguzasht, Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ’s father became a pious and learned Ismaili.

In this iteration of the Sarguzasht, Ḥāsan set out on his Hero’s journey prompted by a revelation from God and the prophet not on the instructions of the dā‘ī, Ibn ‘Aṭṭāsh, found in the Ilkhanid chronicles.⁶¹ The dream sequences and encounters with luminous beings resonate with interactions between Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ and Nāṣir-i Khusraw and their mystical journeys with al-Mustanṣir found in several Badakhshanī da‘wa treatises.⁶² Our author strung

⁵⁸ Daftary, Ismailis. 475-476 and 481, 491

⁵⁹ Mirkhwānd, Rawḍat Al-Ṣafā’. 3070; Khwānd Amīr, Dastūr al-wuzarā’: shāmil-i aḥwāl-i wuzarā-yi Islām tā inqirād-i Taymūriyān. 169.

⁶⁰ Nasr Allah Falsafy, ed. Hasht Maqāla-Yi Ta’rikhī Wa Adabī. (Tehran: 1951). 209

⁶¹ Joseph Campbell, The Hero with a Thousand Faces. (Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2004).

⁶² Shaftolu Gulamadov, “The Hagiography of Nāṣir-i Khusraw and the Ismā‘īlīs of Badakhshān,” diss., University of Toronto, (2018). 243 and 440; Hajiani, Concealment and Manifestation. Treatise VII together and repurposed episodes from the Ilkhanid chronicles to revise Ḥasan's career. In the "cowhide purchase" narrative in Qazwīnī's account, Ḥasan was a cheat and a deceiver. In Khwāja Mu'min's account, Ḥasan became a learned exegete who bested 'Alawī Mahdī in the adherence and interpretation of the shari'a. In Khwāja Mu'min's text, Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ and Nāṣir-i Khusraw acted as witnesses to the declaration of naṣṣ for Nizār b. al-Mustanšir and Ḥasan laboured to secure the Nizari imamate. This treatise narrated in the voice of Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ ends by affirming Ḥasan's obedience to the imam not to divulge his identity; however, this narration itself is a breach. If, as Khwāja Mu'min would have us believe, the text was authored by Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ, then act of writing this purported Sarguzasht-i Sayyidnā would have revealed the identity of the concealed imam!

B. ISMAILI LIFE-NARRATIVE TRADITION

I have argued that Ismailis did not to write ta'rīkh, history qua history, and that the predominant form of historical writing they produced was sīra (pl: siyar biography, in Persian: sarguzasht) and manāqib (sing: manqabat virtues, glories) reports embedded in longer texts in da'wa literature. The purpose of these multi-faceted texts was not primarily for recording past actuality; rather ritual, homiletic, proselytic, didactic, legitimatory and hortative functions were important. Out of about ten published (auto)biographies of prominent Ismaili dā'īs, only the life-narratives of Nāṣir-i Khusraw and Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ have become part of long-standing biographic discourses.⁶³

Ron Sela has examined a sequence of legendary battles between Nāṣir-i Khusraw and Timūr produced in the early eighteenth century. In the preface to the section he wrote that "Interestingly, there are several narratives in the work about false prophets and, for reasons that are unclear to me at the moment, they all put forward the Ismā'īlīs as the symbols of false prophethood."⁶⁴ Perhaps the answer lays in the work of his student, Daniel Beben, who argued that Nāṣir-i Khusraw was effectively reappropriated by the Ismailis as they sought to extend their da'wa in Badakhshan in the eighteenth century.⁶⁵ While a causal relationship is hard to pinpoint, the authors of the legendary biographies of Timūr, were intentionally or unconsciously recasting the biographies of Timūr and Nāṣir-i Khusraw to address developments in their own time.

⁶³ Daniel Beben, "The Legendary Biographies of Nāṣir-i Khusraw: Memory and Textualization in Early Modern Persian Ismā'īlism," diss., Indiana University, 2015).; Gulamadov, "Hagiography of Nāṣir-i Khusraw.";

⁶⁴ Ron Sela, The Legendary Biographies of Tamerlane : Islam and Heroic Apocrypha in Central Asia. (New York: Cambridge University Press, 2011). 113

⁶⁵ Beben, "Legendary Biographies of Nāṣir-i Khusraw." vi

Similarly, the multiple reformulations and repurposing of the Sarguzasht-i Sayyidnā were produced because Ḥasan became a symbol and stand-in for the doctrine of ta'lim and revolutionary Nizari Ismailism which was construed as socio-politically disruptive and theologically an abomination in Sunni ta'rīkh (historiography), fīraq (heresiography) and radd (refutation) literature. Whenever the Nizaris or similar movements became active, their detractors reinvoked and reformulated the biography of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ to bring attention to the potential threat of “heresy” in their society.

The original biography of Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ is not known to be extant. The elusive Sarguzasht-i Sayyidnā has been identified several times but in each instance it has been shown to be something else.⁶⁶ A text, categorically, is a witness to the recording of subjective memory; it is extremely fragile and malleably subject to reformulation. Each successive iteration becomes a witness not only of the past it records but more-so the present in which it was formulated. Past scholarship has rejected narratives because of their anachronisms; we need instead to ask: why was the text written in the way we received it and what contextual factors led to its constructions? It would therefore be appropriate to rethink the fragility of the text into the fluidity of the biographical discourse. Epistemologically, this is a shift away from the fixity of the written word towards the fluidity of the text as a site of memory, ideology, and contested processes of (re)interpretations over time.

⁶⁶ Sarguzasht-i Sayyidnā identified by Ismail Poonawala is not to be found in the manuscript Ismail K. Poonawala, Biobibliography of Ismā'īlī Literature. (Malibu, CA: Undena Publications, 1977). 253. Muḥammad Taqī Dānīshpazhūh published a treatise believing it was the Ḥasan-i Ṣabbāḥ's biography Qāshānī, Zubdat. xxvi-xxi. See my analyses of the text in Hajiani, “Analyses of the Ḥikāyat.”

VII. Bibliography

A. SOURCES

“Hasht Maqāla-Yi Ta’rīkhī Wa Adabī.” edited by Nasr Allah Falsafy, Tehran: 1951.

al-Fāriqī, Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf ibn al-Azraq. “Tārīkh al-Fāriqī.” edited by ‘Abd al-Laṭīf Badawī, Cairo: al-Maṭābi‘ al-Amīriyyah, 1959.

al-Ghazālī, Abū Ḥāmid Muḥammad. “Faḍā’ih al-Bāṭiniyya wa faḍā’il al-Mustaẓhiriyya (The Infamies of the Bāṭinis and the Virtues of the Mustaẓhiris).” In Freedom and fulfillment: an annotated translation of al-Munqidh min al-ḍalāl and other relevant works of al-Ghazālī by Richard McCarthy, trans. Richard Joseph McCarthy, Boston: Twayne Publishers, 1980.

al-Ghazālī, Abū Ḥāmid Muḥammad. “Al-Qisṭās al-mustaqīm (The Just Balance).” edited by Maḥmūd Bijou, Damascus: Al-maṭba‘a al-‘ilmiyya, 1994.

al-Ghazālī, Abū Ḥāmid Muḥammad. “al-Munqidh min al-ḍalāl (The Rescuer from Error).” In Medieval Islamic Philosophical Writings, trans. Muhammad Ali Khalidi, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2005.

Ḥasan-i Maḥmūd-i Kātib. “Spiritual Resurrection in Shi‘i Islam: An Early Ismaili Treatise on the Doctrine of Qiyāmat: Haft Bāb.” trans. S. J. Badakhchani, London: I.B.Tauris, 2017.

Ibn al-Athīr, ‘Izz al-Dīn. “Al-kāmil fī l-ta’rīkh.” edited by Carl Johan Tornberg, Beirut: Dār al-Ṣādir (HII-etext), 1965 (original edition 1851-1876).

Ibn al-Athīr, ‘Izz al-Dīn. “The Chronicle of Ibn al-Athīr for the Crusading Period from al-Kāmil fī l-ta’rīkh.” trans. D. S. Richards, Aldershot, UK; Burlington, VT: Ashgate, 2006.

Ibn al-Jawzī, Abū l-Faraj, and D. S. Margoliouth. “The Devil’s Delusion of Ibn al-Jawzī, a Translation of his ‘Talbīs iblīs’.” Islamic Culture 4 (1935):

Isfizārī, Muḥammad, and Muḥammad Kāẓim. Imām. “Rawḍāt al-Jannāt fī Awṣāf-i Madīnat-i Hirāt: Dar Waṣf-i Ma‘arifāt al-Arḍi wa Jughrāfiyā-yi Tārīkhī.” edited by Muḥammad Kāẓim Imām, Tihrān: Dānishgāh-i Tihrān, 1959.

Juwaynī, ‘Alā’ al-Dīn ‘Aṭā Malik. “The History of the World-Conqueror.” trans. John Andrew Boyle, Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1958.

Juwaynī, ‘Alā’ al-Dīn ‘Aṭā Malik. “Ta’rīkh-i jahān-gushā Vol. 3: Mangū Qā’ān, Hūlāgū and the Ismā‘īlīs.” edited by Mīrzā Muḥammad b. ‘Abdu’l-Wahhāb-i Qazwīnī, London: Luzac & Co (HII-etext), 1958 (original edition 1912-1937).

Khwānd Amīr, Ghiyāth al-Dīn. “Dastūr al-wuzarā’: shāmil-i aḥwāl-i wuzarā-yi Islām tā inqirāḍ-i Taymūriyān.” edited by Sa‘īd Nafīsī, Tehran: Intishārāt-i Iqbāl, 1976.

Mīrkhwānd, Muḥammad b. Khwāndshāh. “Ta’rīkh-i rawḍat al-ṣafā’.” edited by Jamshīd Kiyānfār, Tehran: Aṣāṭīr, 2001.

Qazwīnī, Ḥamd Allāh Mustawfī. “Ta’rīkh-i guzīda.” edited by ‘Abd al-Ḥusayn Navā’ī, Tehran: Amir Kabir, 1985.

Qāshānī, Jamāl al-Dīn ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Alī. “Zubdat al-tawārīkh: bakhsh-i Fāṭimiyān wa Nazāriyān.” edited by Muḥammad Taqī Dānishpazhūh, Tehran: Mu‘assasah-yi Muṭāla‘āt wa Taḥqīqāt-i Farhangī, 1987.

Quhistānī, Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm. “Haft bāb, or Seven Chapters.” edited by Wladimir Ivanow, Bombay: The Ismaili Society, 1959.

Rashīd al-Dīn Faḍl Allāh. “Jāmi‘ al-tawārīkh: qismat-i Ismā‘īliyyān wa Fāṭimiyān wa Nizāriyān wa Dā‘iyyān wa Rafiqān.” edited by Muḥammad Taqī Dānishpazhūh, and Muḥammad Mudarrisī Zanjānī, Tehran: Bungāh-i Tarjama wa Nashr-i Kitāb (HII-etext), 1960.

- Rashīd al-Dīn Faḍl Allāh. “Faṣlī az Jāmi‘ al-tawārīkh: Sarguzasht-i Ḥasan Šabbāḥ wa jānishīnān-i ū yā Tārīkh-i firqa-yi Rafīqān wa Ismā‘īliyyān-i Alamūt.” edited by Muḥammad Dabīr Siyāqī, Tehran: Nashr-i Alburz, 1987.
- Shahrastānī, Muḥammad b. ‘Abd al-Karīm. “Muslim Sects and Divisions: the Section on Muslim Sects in Kitāb al-milal wa’l-niḥal.” trans. A.K. Kazi and J.G. Flynn, London; Boston: Kegan Paul International, 1984.
- . “Kitāb al-milal wa’l-niḥal.” edited by Muḥammad b. Faṭḥ Allāh Badrān (original edition 1955), Qumm: Al-Sharīf al-Rāzi (etext), 1985.
- Ṭūsī, Naṣīr al-Dīn Muḥammad b. Muḥammad. “Paradise of Submission (Rawḍat al-taslīm): a Medieval Treatise on Ismaili Thought.” trans. Seyyed Jalal Badakhchani, London; New York: I.B. Tauris, 2005.

B. LITERATURE

- Beben, Daniel. “The Legendary Biographies of Nāṣir-i Khusraw: Memory and Textualization in Early Modern Persian Ismā‘īlism,” diss., Indiana University, 2015.
- Binbaş, İlker Evrim. “The Anatomy of a Regicide Attempt: Shāhrukh, the Ḥurūfīs, and the Timurid Intellectuals in 830/1426–27.” JRAS 23, no. 3 (2013): 391–428.
- Bowen, Harold. “The Sar-gudhasht-i Sayyidnā, the “Tale of the Three Schoolfellows” and the waṣāyā of the Nizām al-Mulk.” JRAS 4 (1931): 771–82.
- Browne, Edward Granville. “A Literary History of Persia Vol. 2—From Firdawsi to Sa’di (1000–1290).” Bethesda, Md.: Iranbooks, 1997.
- Campbell, Joseph. “The Hero with a Thousand Faces.” Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2004.
- Cortese, Delia. “Lost and found: the Sarguzasht-i Sayyid-nā. Facts and fiction of Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ’s travel to Egypt vis-à-vis the political and intellectual life of 5th/11th century Fāṭimid Cairo.” In Science in the City of Fortune: The Dustūr Al-Munajjimīn and Its World, edited by Eva Orthmann, and Petra G. Schmidl, Berlin: EBVerlag, 2017.
- Daftary, Farhad. “The Ismā‘īlīs: Their History and Doctrines.” Cambridge; New York: Cambridge University Press, 2007.
- Durand-Guédy, David. “Iranian Elites and Turkish Rulers a History of Isfahan in the Saljuq Period.” London; New York: Routledge, 2010.
- Gulamadov, Shaftolu. “The Hagiography of Nāṣir-i Khusraw and the Ismā‘īlīs of Badakhshān,” diss., University of Toronto, 2018.
- Hajiani, Shiraz. “Reconstructing Alamut: New Approaches to the Study of the Qiyāma and the Nizari Polity in Iran,” diss., University of Chicago, 2019.
- . “Ḥikāyat-i Sayyid Nāṣir-i Khusraw: Analyses of a subaltern Nizari Ismaili Text Written before the Declaration of the Qiyāmat-i buzurg (the Great Resurrection) in 559/1164.” Iranian Studies 58, no. 1 (2025): 65–88. doi.org/10.1017/irn.2024.29
- . “Manifesto of the Resurrection A critical edition and translation of the Hikayat-i Sayyid Nasir-i Khusraw, a newly uncovered Nizari Ismaili treatise written before the declaration of the Qiyamat-i Buzurg (the Great Resurrection) in 559/1164.” Iran (2026): 10.1080/05786967.2026.2662119
- . “Concealment and Manifestation: Early Nizari Ismaili Treatises on Eschatology and Soteriology.” London: Institute of Ismaili Studies and Bloomsbury Publishing, Forthcoming.

- . “Ḥasan-i Šabbāḥ and the Emergence of Nizari Ismailism.” Edinburgh: Edinburgh U. P., forthcoming.
- Hillenbrand, Carole. “A Muslim Principality in Crusader Times: The Early Artuqid State.” Istanbul: Nederlands Historisch-Archaeologisch Institute Istanbul, 1990.
- Hodgson, Marshall G. S. “The Order of Assassins: The Struggle of the Early Nizārī Ismā‘īlīs Against the Islamic World.” ‘s-Gravenhage: Mouton, 1955.
- Orthmann, Eva, and Petra G. Schmidl, eds. Science in the City of Fortune: The Dustūr al-munajjimīn and its World Berlin: EB-Verlag, 2017.
- Jackson, Peter, and Laurence Lockhart. “The Cambridge History of Iran Vol. 7: the Timurid and Safavid Periods.” Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1968.
- Poonawala, Ismail K. “Biobibliography of Ismā‘īlī Literature.” Malibu, CA: Undena Publications, 1977.
- Sárközy, Miklós. “Alamūt and Badakhshān: Newly Identified Sargudhasht-i Sayyidnā Manuscripts and their Background.” In Texts, Scribes and Transmission: Manuscript Cultures of the Ismaili Communities and Beyond, 207–37. London: I.B. Tauris, 2022.
- Sárközy, Miklós. “The Early Nizari Ismailis and Their Neighbouring Powers: Politics in the Caspian Provinces.” Bloomsbury Publishing, 2024.
- Sela, Ron. “The Legendary Biographies of Tamerlane : Islam and Heroic Apocrypha in Central Asia.” New York: Cambridge University Press, 2011.
- Smith, Sidonie, and Julia Watson. “Reading Autobiography Now: An Updated Guide for Interpreting Life Narratives, Third Edition.” U of Minnesota Press, 2024.
- Wiley, Peter. “Eagle’s Nest: Ismaili Castles in Iran and Syria.” London; New York: I.B. Tauris, 2005.